Nature-related reporting is gaining momentum across Asia Pacific, with implications for how businesses assess risk, identify opportunities and make strategic decisions. The momentum is driven by developments such as the International Sustainability Standards Board's (ISSB) commencement of standard-setting on nature-related risks and opportunities, drawing on the Taskforce on Nature-related Financial Disclosures' (TNFD) recommendations and guidance where appropriate.

Against this evolving landscape, the Centre for Governance and Sustainability (CGS) at the National University of Singapore (NUS) Business School present its latest study, Nature-Related Practices and Strategies in Asia Pacific 2026, which was within the framework of its partnership with Kering.

The study is also timely in light of the COP 17 to the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD), which marked the first global review of collective progress towards the Kunming-Montreal Global Biodiversity Framework. The study examines the reporting practices of 700 listed companies across 14 jurisdictions. While companies are making progress in recognising and disclosing nature-related issues, significant gaps remain in prioritising these issues. Through presentations and a panel discussion, this event will explore the next stage of how businesses can embed nature into strategy, strengthen assessment practices, and develop meaningful metrics and targets to support long-term sustainability.
